Practice Overview

Prior to taking Silk, Andrew was renowned for his exceptionally sharp mind, his ability to absorb information at an extraordinary pace, and his expert mastery of cases, particularly evident in his advocacy. His ability to navigate through complex legal arguments and cross-examine defendants with precision has made him a standout in the legal field.

With his renowned approach to thoroughness and meticulous attention to detail, Andrew has appeared in every domestic tribunal, from the Magistrates' Court to the House of Lords. Notably, he represented the Appellant in the leading case on the imposition of Hospital Orders in conjunction with mandatory life sentences (R v Drew).

Andrew's heavy criminal caseload includes some of the most complex and serious cases, such as multi-handed conspiracies to supply Class A drugs, complex frauds, and cases of murder and rape. He has been regularly instructed by the Crown Prosecution Service's Complex Casework Unit, handling challenging and high-profile multi-handed conspiracies, including those involving international jurisdictional issues. Throughout his career, Andrew has appeared as a Leading Junior in both Crown and Defence cases.

Since taking Silk, Andrew has continued to demonstrate his expertise and skill in the highest-profile criminal matters. He was instructed in a five-handed murder case, where he successfully secured an acquittal. Additionally, he has successfully prosecuted a single-punch murder case. Andrew is currently instructed to prosecute a gross negligence manslaughter case involving the neglect of a young girl and is also leading the prosecution in a case concerning the murder of an occupier during a series of burglaries. His continued success in both prosecution and defence underscores his standing as one of the preeminent advocates in the country.
